

People First

Communication & feedback

08/26/2026

Why important to spend time on this - again?

JÖNKÖPING
UNIVERSITY

3.

Taking responsibility for agreed work.

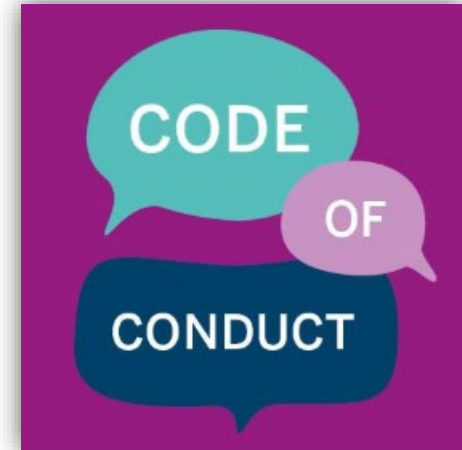

Clarify expectations. Don't assume.
Give feedback about + & -

- An identified need from our work environment workshop this spring
- A decided activity in our work environment strategy

JU Employee Policy

Medarbetarpolicy för Jönköping University

...taking responsibility; fostering a trusting work environment...; highlighting shortcomings...; being engaged and committed...; being curious, showing courage...

Code of conduct definierar hur vi förväntas bemöta varandra och vår omgivning.

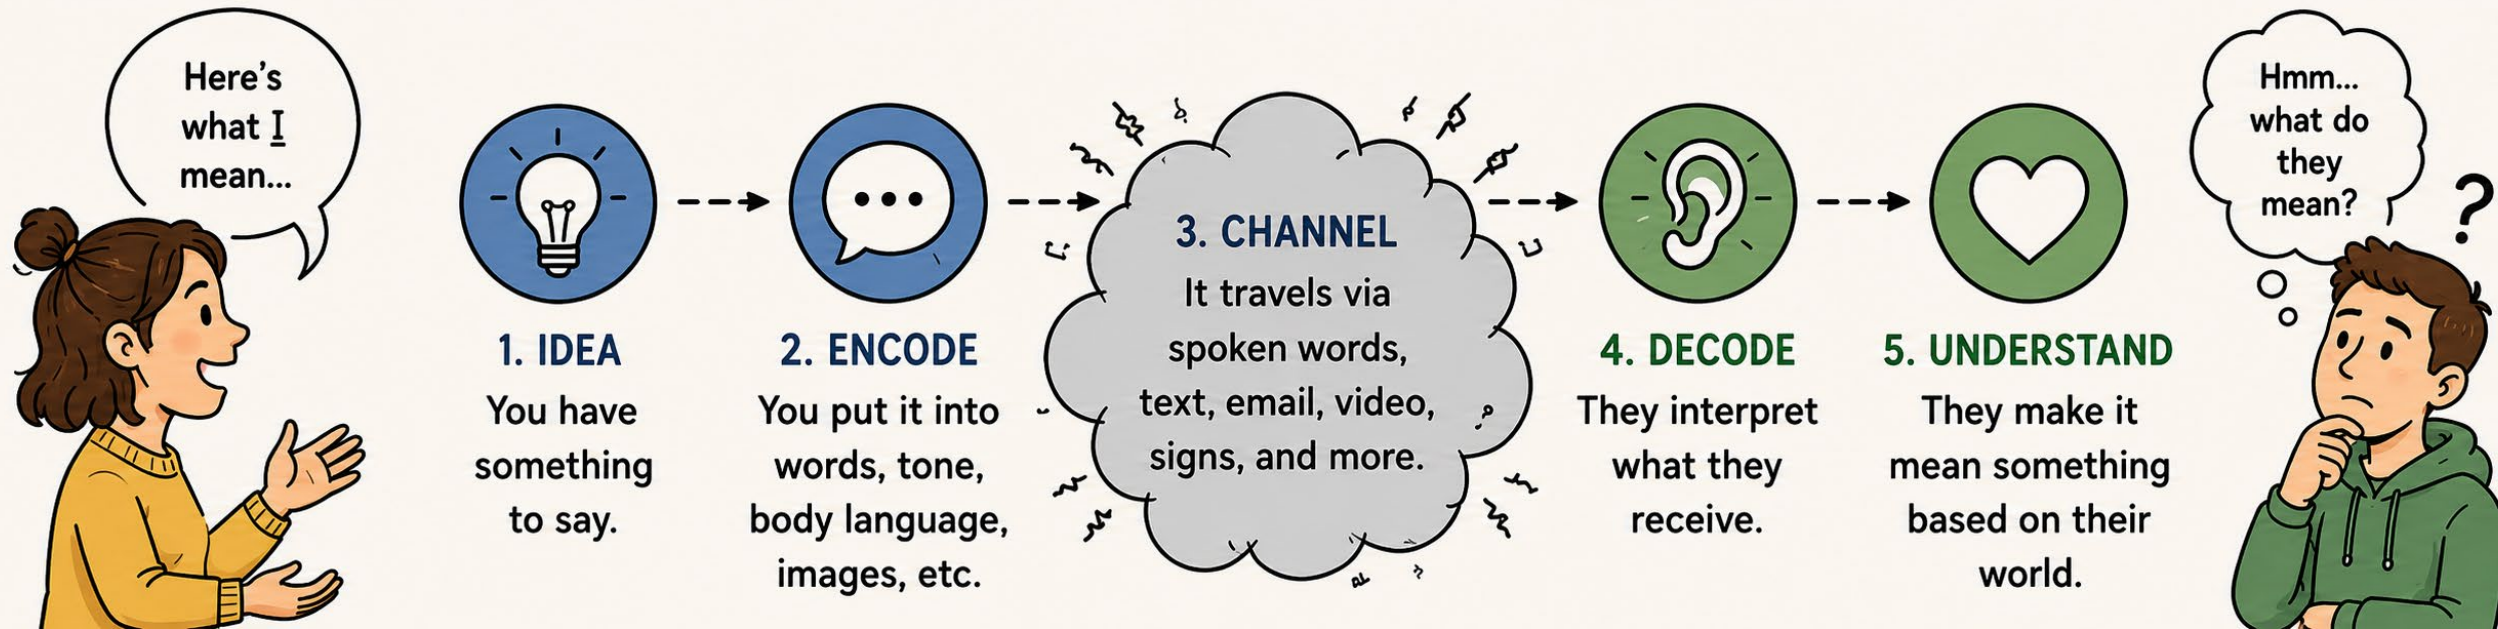

The Code of Conduct sets out how we are expected to treat each other and those around us.

Why important to spend time on this - again?

Communication is at the very core of our work

It influences efficiency, quality, creativity, wellbeing, innovation

It is also quite difficult...

Your take-aways from this session could be...

- Some new insights
- Some inspiration
- Some tools to use and steps to take
- Some re-assurance and support

Feedback session

Agenda

Introduction => what is it and why and when to use feedback?

Sharing Experiences

Handling situations professionally – how to deliver feedback

Draw the line – context and culture

Where do we go from here?

“The way we talk to each other shapes the culture
we work in.”

What is feedback, really?

Why feedback?

A low-angle, upward-looking photograph of three individuals wearing teal-colored shirts. They are all giving a thumbs-up gesture. The person in the foreground is a woman with curly hair, smiling. Behind her is a man, and further back is another person. The background is a bright, clear sky. The image has a positive, energetic feel.

Sharing Experiences

Think of a situation where feedback — given or received — made a positive difference. What happened?

Think of a situation where something felt off, but no feedback was given. What was the impact?

What makes it hard to give or receive feedback in our environment?

How to give feedback
professionally

A simple framework for giving feedback:

=> I would like to give you some feedback. Is that ok? (if not, then re-schedule)

- 1. Describe the situation (facts, not judgments)
- 2. Express how it affected you or others
- 3. Suggest what could be different
- 4. Invite dialogue — make it a conversation

- "Hey, can I run something by you that I've been thinking about?"
- "I've been thinking about something related to how we work here, and I was curious to hear your perspective on it."
- "This isn't a big deal, but I'd really like to hear your thoughts on something."
- "I hope it's okay if I bring up a small observation, mainly because I'd like to understand how you see it."
- "I've been thinking about something at work and wanted to take the opportunity to get your thoughts on it."
- "How do you actually see [this area/this situation]? I've been reflecting on it myself."
- "I think we may have slightly different perspectives on something, and I'd be interested to talk about it."
- "Could I get your perspective on a work-related issue I've been mulling over?"
- "This is completely open-ended, but I'm curious about how you think about [...]."
- "I'd like to check a thought with you and see whether it's just me who sees it that way or whether we're on the same page."

Where do I draw MY line?

What behavior is acceptable to me
— and what is not?

When do I feel the need to say
“stop” — and what holds me back?

How do I recognize when a line has been crossed — for me or for someone else?

Where do
I go from here?

Receiving feedback

The feedback ladder

"Feedback is not about being right. It's about being in a relationship."

Change starts with one conversation at a time

Thank you!

Ann & Anette

